

Gatherly — The Way To Meet

Rediscover Your City

Every block, café, or park bench holds untold possibilities. Imagine stepping out on a sunny afternoon and realizing someone nearby loves the same thing you do — maybe it's a slice of pizza from your favorite street vendor or a game of badminton in the local park.

Gatherly unlocks those everyday moments of connection. Instead of just scrolling alone, you can turn right now into a chance to meet people. It's like bringing your neighborhood pub into your pocket: a friendly local spot where everyone's open to making a new friend.

Shared Experiences, Real Connections

Gatherly makes it easy to discover or host meetups of 2–4 people that fit your day. Each gathering has a clear time, place, and shared interest.

You might find today's plans include:

- Morning coffee with others who share your favorite playlist
- Badminton or ping-pong in the park for a fun workout
- Street food walk, tasting the best snacks around the corner
- Casual cooking or language exchange over a homemade dinner

Every meetup includes a quick group chat beforehand so you know who you're meeting and can break the ice. Just spending two hours together counts directly toward friendship — a 2-hour activity is 2 hours closer to a new bond.

By joining an activity, you're signaling "I'm here to connect," which removes the awkward guesswork of talking to a stranger. In Gatherly, everyone's here for the same reason: to have fun and meet people.

Beyond Chats & Swipes

Group chats fill your phone with familiar names; social media shows you the same crowd; friend-finding apps feel too much like dating apps. These tools are great for keeping up with people you already know — but they rarely spark new real-world meetups.

Gatherly bridges that gap, turning your city into a place for new connections instead of just another scrolling feed.

Small Groups, Big Bonds

We learned that 3–4 people is the sweet spot for turning strangers into friends.

Safe, Simple, Spontaneous

Safety and simplicity are built in.

Become Part of Something Local

Gatherly isn't about virtual likes or endless planning — it's about real moments in your neighborhood.
